It's been a while since our last blog and what better way to break the drought than to blog from the Singaporean Formula One race.

As the only night race on the Formula One calendar and only an eight hour flight from Brisbane we thought we would head over and check it out.

Well I'm currently sitting in the grandstand at turn one the sun has just gone down. Singapore at night looks amazing and the race circuit is no exception under lights.

If you have ever been to a formula one race you would know how loud these cars are. The sounds echo through the buildings making the atmosphere so much more special.

The cars are hard under brakes into the turn at the end of the main strait then a quick blip of the throttle into two and again on the brakes for the left hand turn three. Each car is only in view for 5 seconds but with the field spread out and three big tv screens in front of me there is plenty to see.

This track has some great highlights such as free access to the Singapore flyer, the worlds highest observation wheel. The view over the track at night is simply amazing. If your sitting in the bay grandstand you have one of the worlds best views. Looking out over the bay you have the Marina Bay Sands Hotel on the left and the city and Merlion in front and to the right.
